REGIONAL PLANS ON DEPOPULATION AND INTER-ADMINISTRATIVE COORDINATION

The internal migratory flows reinforce the imbalance in the distribution of population between rural and urban areas. This population imbalance may jeopardize the provision of public services in both cases although for different reasons. On the one hand, local governments in rural areas have fewer resources to provide public services. On the other hand, governments in urban areas concentrating migratory flows experience under greater pressure on the provision of public services.

Local action tackling depopulation is partially embedded into regional plans in several Spanish Autonomous Communities. These plans differ on several grounds: (i) top-down versus bottom-up approach, (ii) depopulated-areas focused versus region-wide oriented plans, (iii) types of measures (fiscal incentives, public investment in infrastructures and services, among others). These factors may generate diverse dynamics in the interadministrative relations between the levels of government.

The previous situation in turn has been altered due to the approval of the Plan of Measures to Combat the Demographic Challenge (hereinafter “the PDC”), which will include an investment in excess of 10 billion euros, around 10% of the Recovery, Transformation and Resilience Plan. The overall aim of the Plan is fighting depopulation and guaranteeing social and territorial cohesion. The volume and short time frame of the funds coming from Europe require an exceptional organisational and management capacity on the part of the public sector. In this context, the reinforcement of the inter – administrative relations will be a key feature in order to develop joint strategies and concrete projects to implement the aforesaid Plan.

Bearing in mind the previous factors, the main objective of the workshop will be to address the relationship between depopulation plans and inter-administrative relations.
